Description :

Prsentation de l'diteurIn the last few years many books on the afterlife have surfaced. A few of these, like Professor Stafford Bettys "The Afterlife Unveiled," show what spiritshumans who have survived deathtell us about their world. All the evidence suggests they are closer to The Sourcewhich some call God. And that closeness, far from freeing them from religion, inspires in them a more joyous religion than anything they knew on earth. This book is about the religion they practiceand the one well be practicing, if we want to, in a few short years. More importantly, it will inspire in us a sense of lifes importance here and now. Life on Earth is a great gift, and we should not waste our time drifting from distraction to distraction, or hemmed in by a religious orthodoxy that stifles and suffocates. We have our souls to build, and the spirits show us, both by example and instruction, how to go about it. The religions we've fashioned here on earth for our use could all use an upgrade. They are mere moons that should derive their light from the central sun. This book is about that sun.
